Levine Stanford University'S Decision In 1988 To Replace the Cornerstone of Its Curriculum -- A Required Western Culture Survey Course -- With A More Pluralistic Incarnation That Included Women, Minority and Non-European Voices Transformed Its Campus Into A Battleground For A Sometimes Bitter National Debate Over Education, the Heated Rhetoric From Off-Campus Critics of the New Course, "Culture, Ideas and Values," Created Fears That the University Would Soon Shelve the Works of Plato and Shakespeare For Lesser Authors and Thinkers of Non-European Traditions. But Professors and Education Experts Say the Changes Have Been Minor and Part of A Larger and Gradual Change To Stanford'S Curriculum.	1993-02-03	TX 3-479-103
